INVESTIGATION IS CONTINUED INTO AIRPLANE CRASH

Accident Which Cost Lives Of
Davis and Wooster
Probed

TAKE-OFF IS TOLD OF

Will Determine Whether The Plane Was Overloaded Or If Engine Trouble Was Cause

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Apr. 27 (I. N. S.)—A naval board of inquiry continued its investigation today into the aerial crash which cost the lives of Lieut. Commander Noel Davis and Lieut. S. H. Wooster in a final practice flight with the trans-Atlantic plane, American Legion.

The inquiry will determine whether the plane, carrying a load of 16,000 pounds, was overloaded, as charged, or whether the crash resulted from engine trouble. Witnesses told the board that the plane rose only 50 feet in the air following the take-off and that Davis sought to get elevation by a spiral. Losing height, it was said, Davis finally tried to make an emergency landing. The plane landed safely, ran 100 feet across marshland, witnesses said, and then dove nose-first into a duck hole in a marsh adjoining the air field.

The investigation will determine how Davis and Wooster died, reports varying that they were asphyxiated by gasoline fumes, drowned in the waters of the marsh and killed by being crushed in the cockpit of the plane. The bodies of both men are being held by naval authorities.

Mrs. Davis, wife of the navigator, remained here with friends.

OVER 100 PLAY CARDS FOR TENNIS CLUB BENEFIT

Party Held in Elks' Home On Monday Evening Was A
Delightful Affair

MANY PRIZES AWARDED

The Elks' Tennis Club held its last card party for the season in the social room of the Home on Monday evening. A large crowd was present, 28 tables of "500" being formed.

The prizes which were awarded to those who were fortunate enough to attain high scores were particularly valuable and attractive. Mrs. Roy Tracy won first prize with a score of 4190 and selected a beautiful black patent leather hat box. Mrs. H. D. Webb having a score of 3680 was given second choice and chose a console mirror. Harry Pope was third, his score being 3660, and a wicker fernery was awarded to him. Others who were given prizes were:

Mrs. N. B. Bertolette, 3550; Miss Elizabeth Rue, 3540; Miss Hester Boyle, 3460; Mrs. William H. Pearson, 3400; Mrs. Nan L. McDermott, 3360; Miss Elizabeth Brennan, 3300; Miss Mary Strong, 3290; Mrs. B. Magill, 3250; Miss Esther Lawrence, 3090; Mrs. H. R. Shipp, 3080; Miss G. "Poverty Banquet" Was Decided Success Here

The "Poverty Banquet" held in the banquet hall of the Methodist Church, Monday evening, was a very successful affair. It was very unique in character and caused a lot of pleasure and merriment.

In addition to a small admission fee, each participant brought a box lunch. As each one entered the room, he was met by a committee and lines were levied upon him for articles of clothing or jewelry which he wore. For silk hosiery the fine was five cents, buttons on the coat sleeves were one cent each, silk neckties were rated at five cents.

The box lunches were spread out upon the tables which had been set in the basement, and the Ladies' Aid Society, under whose auspices the affair was given, furnished coffee and jelly. At the conclusion of the luncheon a number of toasts were responded to as follows:

William H. Wilkinson spoke upon the topic, "Church and Membership." James Guy in responding to the toast, "Choir and Music," reviewed the history of the choir, from the time he became a member of the church. The "Aid Society and the Pastor's Aid Society" was the subject assigned to Mrs. William P. Batz. Mrs. Adam Smith spoke of the work accomplished by the "Woman's Home Missionary Society" and Doron Green reviewed the history and development of the Sunday School for the last half century. Miss Mary Lippincott, Mrs. Laura Taylor, Harry J. Arnold, Miss Anna M. Heritage, dwelt upon the work of the bible classes. Samuel Rogers used as his topic, "The People's League," and H. H. H. Poole explained the finances of the church. The new pastor, Dr. Ellery closed the entertainment with a short talk. Mrs. H. H. Poole acted as toast-mistress in a most pleasing and efficient manner.

CONDUCT CAMPAIGN

In the schools of Bristol Township a campaign is now being conducted for the prevention of diphtheria. This campaign is along educational lines, and treatment will later be given. The children of the public schools in Bensalem Township have received treatment; and the students of the parochial and industrial schools are now having the toxin-anti-toxin treatment administered.

Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Minister, of Radcliffe street, Miss Anna Foster, of Mill street, and her guest, Miss Elizabeth Percy, of Philadelphia, motored to Asbury Park on Sunday and spent the day there.

Philadelphia's Fire Insurance Cost

(EDITORIAL)

FIRE insurance premiums collected in our neighboring city of Philadelphia during 1926, as shown in the report of the Fire Insurance Patrol, which was made public a week or two ago, aggregated $13,400,193.

That total of nearly thirteen and a half millions of dollars was the sum spent last year by the people of Philadelphia for indemnity against fire.

If we eliminate from the population figures for Philadelphia all the children, wives and others who are not insurers at all, and consider each home and household, and each business, to represent one insurer each, the number of such insurers probably would not exceed 200,000. If that figure is a fair approximation, it is easy to see that the average expenditure per insurer for fire insurance in Philadelphia in 1926 was $67.

Of course, many paid out much less, and a great many paid a great deal more. The annual cost of fire insurance for many industrial and business establishments runs into thousands of dollars every year.

It must be borne in mind, also, that this is not merely a precautionary expenditure. It cannot be escaped, even if one, in a spirit of poor economy, might be disposed to "take a chance." For, a very large part of the sum spent each year for fire insurance is for the protection of collateral against commercial loans, mortgages, etc., and to sustain the general credit structure, which could not be what it is today except for fire insurance.

Of the total amount of fire insurance premiums paid in Philadelphia during 1926, $4,249,761 was collected by Pennsylvania stock companies; $6,268,021 was paid to the stock companies of States other than Pennsylvania; $2,162,151 went to foreign stock companies; $309,820 was collected by the mutual companies of Pennsylvania, and $410,440 was paid to the mutual companies of other States.

To group the figures in another and more significant way, more than 90% of the fire insurance premiums paid in Philadelphia during 1926 was collected by stock companies, and less than 10% was collected by mutual companies. The actual figures were: $12,679,933 for the stock companies, and $720,260 for the mutual companies.

The reason for the preponderant amount of business done by the stock companies is as clear as it should be significant. The mutual companies are, as the designation indicates, co-operative enterprises and confine their insurance to such mills and other properties as represent the minimum of hazard and the maximum of resistance to fire, both as to construction and sprinkler and other fire-fighting equipment.

It is to the stock companies, therefore, that the country at large must look for its fire insurance, for the protection of collateral against commercial loans, mortgages, etc., and of the general credit structure.

It is the stock companies that maintain the underwriters associations, and through those expert and experienced organizations, promulgate the rates and establish the standards and requirements under which they will issue their policies. These standards and requirements are in the interest of the entire public, in the form of lowered rates and a lessened risk of disastrous fire.

The lesson that is to be drawn is two-fold: first, that we are dependent upon the stock companies; second, that the only way to a lowered expenditure for fire insurance is by adoption of the requirements of the underwriters associations, and effecting at the same time every individual form of fire prevention.

HULMEVILLE FAMILY ENROUTE FROM CHINA

Rev. and Mrs. Theron Illick
Expected To Reach U. S.
On Saturday, May 30

HAVE LITTLE BAGGAGE

HULMEVILLE, Apr. 27.—Professor and Mrs. J. Theron Illick and their two sons, Roland and Paul, who have been located in Nanking, China, during the long period of unrest there, are now enroute to the United States.

Letters have been received by Mrs. Helen Illick, here, mother of Mr. Illick, to the effect that they left the port of Shanghai on April 7th, and are expected to land at San Francisco on the 30th of this month. From the western port they plan to make their way direct to Olean, New York, the home of Mrs. Theron Illick's father.

The letters mailed by Mr. Illick since leaving China were thought to be sent by a ship landing at Seattle, Washington, as they bear a Seattle postmark.

In a letter the missionary to this country of the Orient, told how while he was still engaged in teaching at the University of Nanking, the noise of battle could be heard, many shots being fired nearby.

The only baggage the Illick family is able to bring to the States is a suitcase and another small bag. Two trunks which were sent from their home some time before they left Nanking, have never been located. Some of their possessions which they prized highly, however, were shipped to their home here several months ago, when this trouble was anticipated.

Fire JUST LOVES A DISORDERLY Housekeeper

MANY PRIZES WILL BE GIVEN TO THE WINNERS

Boys To Keenly Compete For Medals and Numerous
Other Awards

EXPECT CLOSE CONTEST

A fine collection of medals, cups and articles of merchandise are included in the prizes which are to be awarded to winners in the various events to be staged here in connection with Boys' Week, May 1st to 7th.

A big fine Boy Scout knife is to be given to each ward champion in the marble contest. The borough champion of the marble games will be presented with a handsome silver cup properly engraved. This cup will be his permanently.

The winning ball team will be presented with a silver cup suitably inscribed.

To the boy finishing first and to those coming in second in the various track and field events medals will be presented.

Winners of the poster contest will receive as a first prize, $10; second prize, $7.50; third prize, $5. Bathing suits and baseballs will be given to winners of the novelty events in which it is expected there will be keen competition.

The ward having the largest number of boys in line will get a banner and will carry the large American flag around the high school campus at the head of the line, after the parade reaches the field on Saturday, May 7th.

S. S. WORKERS TO MEET AT LANGHORNE

W. D. Reel, General Secretary
To Be Chief Speaker
Of the Day

EXPECT BIG GATHERING

"The High Calling of the Sunday School Teacher," to be discussed by W. D. Reel, general secretary of Philadelphia County Sabbath School Association, will be one of the high lights of the 24th annual convention of the Fourth District Sabbath School Union of Bucks County in the Presbyterian Church, Langhorne, Friday, April 29th.

The Rev. William S. Heist, pastor of the Lutheran Church at South Langhorne, will be in charge of the devotions when the afternoon session opens at 2 p. m., and he will be followed by Mr. Reel, who is well-versed in the subject he will discuss.

Another address will be given by Miss Elizabeth R. Williamson, of Philadelphia, whose subject will be "Evangelistic Work in Brazil." Just before the close of the afternoon session, greetings will be given by the county officers and committees will be appointed.

A large number usually attends these conventions, and every Sabbath School in the townships of Middletown, Northampton, Southampton, Newtown, Lower Makefield is invited.

Those who are planning to attend are asked to bring questions they wish to have answered to the afternoon session. A supper will be served between the afternoon and evening meetings.

At 7 o'clock a song service will take place, accompanied by the orchestra of the Langhorne M. E. Church; and devotions will be in charge of the Rev. I. S. Seltz, pastor of the Langhorne M. E. Church.

Following reports the assemblage will listen to Rev. O. R. Palmer, pastor of the Berachah Church, Philadelphia, speak on "The Lord in the Sunday School and the Home."

The executive committee consists of Charles A. Guthrie, Langhorne, president; John Baxter, Langhorne, vice-president; Mrs. A. B. Barclay, Churchville, secretary; treasurer, Joseph A. Addis.

John R. T. Strockbine Dies At Torresdale Home

John R. T. Strockbine, husband of Mary (nee Dainty) Strockbine, died at his late residence, Torresdale, early Monday afternoon.

The funeral services to which relatives and friends and all organizations with which he was affiliated are invited, will be held from his late residence, Arendell avenue, Torresdale, on Thursday at 2.30 p. m.

Goodly Sum Subscribed At Church Meeting Here

A goodly sum was subscribed at the meeting held in the Wood Street Presbyterian Chapel, last evening, for the fund for the proposed erection of the Sunday School building adjoining the present edifice.

A rousing meeting took place, with the Rev. Henry M. Hartmann, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Thomas Harper and Rev. Andrew G. Solla, pastor of the Chapel, as speakers.

The sum desired was not subscribed at this meeting but it is hoped that the necessary funds will be raised by Sunday. The financial committee composed of the pastor, Charles Inzogia and Dominic Rago, will be glad to receive monies, and ask that members and friends of the church assist with the donations.

ROHM & HAAS WIN BOWLING LEAGUE CROWN

Take Three Straight Games
From Pacific Boiler
Makers

ROPER STAR OF MATCH

Rohm & Haas team defeated the Pacific Steel Boiler bowlers three straight games in the play-off for the winner of the second half of the Bristol Bowling League. Rohm & Haas team is claiming the championship now that they have won both the first and second half.

The first game was a nip and tuck affair and the final outcome was undetermined until the anchor men, Capewell and Wenzel had finished their frame. Rohm & Haas won out by a large margin of nine pins, the score being 783 to 774. The second game was even more exciting due to the fact that both teams rolled over 900 scores. Only 11 pins separated the two teams at the finish, the score being 929 to 918.

Feature of the game was the finishing of Wenzel who struck out from the seventh frame and finished with a score of 221 which was the principal cause of the Pacific men's downfall.

Roper was the most consistent bowler of the evening totaling 628 pins and rolled the entire match without a miss or a split, contributing two games with over 200 scores and missing the third by a pin for 200. His rolling last night practically decided the match.

Rohm & Haas Social Club Entertains 60 Club Members

The Rohm & Haas Social Club gave a party in the club house on Saturday evening. About 60 members of the club were present.

The main feature of the evening was a play in three acts, which was written by Dr. Charles Peet, a chemist at Rohm and Haas Company. This play was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone, particularly as it was a burlesque on the employees and activities of the firm.

After the play, several reels of movies were shown, which were taken at the Rohm and Haas plant.

The refreshments were served in the form of a box lunch, which had been prepared by the ladies. They contained numbers and each guest had to draw for a box.

Dancing was enjoyed the remainder of the evening, the music being furnished by Kallenbach's Orchestra.

At a late hour they all departed, having spent a most pleasant evening.

CONCERT

Tomorrow evening a concert will be given by Dr. Sterling Rex at the Bethel A. M. E. Church at 8 o'clock. He will be assisted by F. Hardy Hebron, and a fine program is promised.

DISPOSE OF HERD AFTER BARN BURNS; WITHOUT SHELTER

Rebuilding of The Heacock
Dairy Barn Appears
Uncertain

SURE OF INCENDIARIES

Fire Marshal Stackhouse Of Opinion That Big Plant
Was Set Afire

Owing to the fact that very scant accommodations remain for the 110 head of registered dairy cattle that were made homeless as a result of the $75,000 fire at the Joseph Heacock Company Dairy, Woodside, Saturday night, officials of the company stated today that the herd is being sold to various dairymen. It is not a certainty at this time whether the dairy barn will be rebuilt or not.

Valued at $35,000, the herd is one of the finest in the country. Milk from this herd was shipped daily to dairies in Philadelphia and was considered the finest milk produced in the East. Through the efforts of two employees of the Heacock Dairy Farm, all of the cattle was rescued from the barn, including 110 head of registered stock and 10 head of younger stock.

County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse, Hulmeville, states that he is still of the opinion that the fire was of incendiary origin. All day yesterday various theories were investigated as to the probable cause of the fire, but not the least bit of suspicion was cast upon anyone.

"There is something radically wrong with conditions in Bucks county in reference to fires of incendiary origin," declared County Fire Marshal Stackhouse. "Something must be done to apprehend the firebugs in these cases. I am almost sure that six of the eight barn fires in the past ten days in Bucks county were of incendiary origin."

Violet Clardy Is Hostess To Her Chums

A very pleasing affair was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Clardy, of 512 Jefferson avenue, on Saturday evening, in honor of the thirteenth birthday of their daughter, Violet. The home was beautifully decorated in purple and white. Many cut flowers were also used as adornments.

In the competitive games, prizes were given to Maurice Mulligan, Margaret Cox and Helen Rogers.

The invited list of guests included: Anita Gallagher, Margaret Cox, Rita Ferry, Margaret Kervick, Louise Downs, Eileen McGonigle, Helen Rogers, Mary Clardy, Margaret Johnson, Elizabeth Clardy, Maurice Mulligan, John McGinley, Walter Kelly, Edward Kervick, Edward Cook, Joseph Winslow, James Roe, Harold Snyder.

Mrs. Walter Kelly, Miss Anna Woolman, Mr. and Mrs. James Tuzzolo and daughter, Elma, Mr. and Mrs. James Stout and daughter, Eleanor, Mr. George Stout and children, Charles, Jessie and George, of Trenton, N. J.; also Mr. Maurice Cockman, Mrs. D. Bonner and Mrs. Elizabeth Clardy, of Bristol.

EVERYDAY EVOLUTION

The theory of evolution is very interesting, intriguing and all that, but the laity is inclined to find it too profound and mentally-fatiguing as a regular course of study and resigns the task to philosophers, archaeologists and scientists.

There is a commonplace and everyday phase of evolution that is constantly observed with keen interest by all. This popular evolution does not deal in light years, universes and rock strata but with the little changes in the habits of man and conditions of life which are constantly taking place everywhere.

A writer in Motor notes that the horse is no longer frightened by the automobile and locomotive. Less than twenty years ago automobiles took to the ditch with shut-off motors while shying horses were led gingerly past by their drivers. If horses during the incipency of the automobile had an inherent fear of the gasoline buggy, they have since evolved an inherent heedlessness of its existence.

The much maligned but more indulgent cigarette presents another intriguing example of everyday evolution. When the United States entered the World War the majority of cigarette smokers "rolled their own," but the signing of the armistice found the American smoker buying his fags ready-rolled in packs. The evolution of smoking has virtually cast the once familiar cigarette paper into oblivion. For general year-around wear the low shoe is now almost universally used although fifteen years past it was worn only in summer and by a minority of persons. The evolution of the automobile from the open model to the closed type is generally conceded. One need not seek far for many other parallel demonstrations of contemporary evolution.

KEEPING UP

An investigation conducted by a guaranty company to ascertain to what extent and why men are dishonest reveals that defalcations are increasing. That more is wanted than one is able to acquire honestly is ascribed as the chief reason for departure from rectitude. An effort to keep up with the neighbors, to be regarded as a liberal spender, often leads to "borrowing" from the employer's till.

There is an intent at first to return the money but difficulty in accumulating a surplus in the face of continuing demands makes restoration difficult. The next time it is easier, probably, to take a little larger amount until in time the shortage becomes so great that there is no hope of being able to wipe out the defalcation and the only effort is to delay discovery as long as possible.

It is a person of weak character who feels an obligation to keep up with the neighbors when the income does not warrant such expenditures. It may be that the neighbors are not provident either. It is true that many things once esteemed luxuries have in common view become necessities. But one should have enough independence of character to restrict one's expenditures to one's purse. Many do but the proportion of those who do not is increasing, if the guaranty company's finding does not exaggerate the situation.

It would help to remove a lot of pessimism if one could raise vegetables like those shown in the seed catalogs.

SYNOPSIS

John Ballard rises from poverty to District Attorneyship. He loves Viola Rustkin, but Fate sends her to Hardin, an old chum, now President of a great railroad and putty to Jordan, money king. Jordan's greed causes a grave accident. John grimly sets to work to put responsible officials in jail. Knowing John's love for Viola, he threatens disclosure of a college brawl. John refuses to be coerced, and the evidence aborts. Phil, remembering papers of his father's that may clear the road, asks Viola to fetch them. En route, her auto is wrecked.

CHAPTER XV—Continued

"Are you all right, madam? Another car—came around the curve on the wrong side—going fast. He skidded and struck us—we've a broken front axle, and his car is wrecked. He's unhurt—the other driver."

"So am I. But—neither car can move."

"I'm afraid not, madam. Perhaps I can get another car. There are lights a little way ahead. I'll inquire."

"I'll come with you."

"Better wait, Mr. Hardin."

"I'm not afraid of the rain—I am wearing stout shoes and a raincoat."

So she set out, through the darkness and the rain. The lights proved to be those of a wayside station on the railway. The village was four miles away. All wires were down; all telephone wires, that was; only the railway telegraph lines were still working.

"There's no chance to get another car to take me to Plainsville?"

"I'm afraid not, madam—unless one comes along. And that's not likely, at this time of a night like this."

His breath came in great gasps.

"But—I can flag the night express, that goes through here in about three-quarters of an hour. That will get you to Plainsville before a car would."

"Do that, please," said Viola.

"We're rather lucky, after all, aren't we, Hastings?"

"I'm glad it's no worse, madam," said the chauffeur. "I'm very sorry about the accident."

"It wasn't your fault, Hastings—I shall make Mr. Hardin understand that. You're not to worry at all. Stay here in the station until morning—you can attend to the car then."

"I've hesitated a moment."

"I want you to send a telegram for me, please," she said. "Have you a blank?"

He found one, and she wrote out a despatch explaining what had happened, and had it sent to Phil.

"That telegram was delivered as Phil sat, biting his nails, in Jordan's room. His face grew white."

"Good God!" he said. "She might have been killed!"

"Those papers might have been lost!" said Jordan. "What's she doing—coming on the train? Good for her!"

"I hope she gets here," said Roberts, gloomily. "That bridge—"

"That bridge will last longer than you will if you don't stop your croaking!" snapped Jordan. "My God, haven't I enough on my mind without having to listen to your bleating every minute?"

Roberts, silenced, sat down. Silence fell in the room. Outside the wind roared and wailed; the rain beat harder and harder against the windows.

"What time is that train due?" snapped Jordan.

"Five fifteen a.m.," said Roberts. "They drop a sleeper here, and people can stay in it till half past seven. This is a junction point—that's why it gets a sleeper of its own."

"Five fifteen—and it's four thirty now," said Jordan. "Call up and see if the train's on time. You'd better be at the station to meet it."

"Darn it—do you suppose I wouldn't be there to meet my wife?" snapped Phil.

He felt queer. Viola. How abominably he had treated her. Now he had lost her. She loved Ballard. He didn't blame her. But he—for the first time, now that it was too late—he loved her. He knew that. What strange fatality had pursued his marriage? He might have won her, in the beginning; have weaned her from her love for Ballard. But he had done everything to alienate her. She despised him now; she must. She knew him as he was, with every pretense stripped away.

Roberts turned from the telephone.

"On time out of Kenbridge," he said. "She's coming right along."

Age long, the minutes passed. Jordan walked up and down the room. Judge Gordon, impassive, played solitaire. Phil sat, lost in his thoughts.

"Five minutes to five! Better be getting down to the station," said Jordan, suddenly.

Phil started, and rose from his chair, looking at his watch.

"All right," he said, dully.

The telephone, close by him, rang out, shrilly. He reached for it, and answered, mechanically.

"Mr. Jordan's rooms. All right."

He turned. "Robert!" he said. "Some one wants you."

Roberts crossed the room.

"Hello!" he said. "Yes. Speaking. What? My God!"

He stood, listening, his face blanched. The others leaped up, staring at him. He dropped the receiver.

"The dam's gone!" he said. "The bridge can't last an hour! And that train's rushing straight to it—it will be the last straw to send it down!"

Phil Hardin screamed. Then, all at once, he was cool.

"The train can be stopped—"

"No! The wires are down. They've sent a handcar out—but there's hardly a chance, on a night like this. Come on!"

"Where? Jordan's voice snapped. "To the bridge! They've ordered a wrecking train out, and doctors and nurses!"

"But—doctors—nurses—!"

"You called me a croaker! I'm not the only one! Murder! That's what it's been—leaving that bridge in the state it's been in!"

Phil cried out again, like a man to mortal agony.

"Violat! My wife!" he cried.

"Those papers—they'll be lost!" said Jordan.

It was Judge Gordon who caught the hand Phil had raised to strike Jordan down.

"No use in that," he said, gently. Phil had turned away. He dashed out of the room. He ran from the hotel, through the rain, halless, coatless, toward the station. An amazed officer followed; was out-distanced.

"Nuti!" he said. "Have to see what he's up to and tell the chief!"

Five minutes later the officer was telephoning to Ballard.

"Yeh—that's right, chief," he said. "Seems his wife's on this train. They think's going to be wrecked at the bridge. And he jumped on a hand car to chase down and try to flag it. Not a chance—not this weather. He too late—hey—Central—you cut me off!"

But he hadn't been cut off. Ballard was gone. Like Phil Hardin, only one thought was in his mind—to reach the bridge.

CHAPTER XVI

Darkness—with, in the east, through the driving storm clouds, the first faint hint of the grey dawn.

A rushing stream, broken by jutting rocks, boiling and seething in its course. A steel bridge, outlined against the faint lightening in the eastern sky. Stone piers, massive looking, superb towers of masonry—and rotten at their hearts.

Stone piers, swaying in the wind with the water already swirling beneath them, finding entrance through a thousand growing cracks, gnawing at their very vitals.

Far away to the south through the milk a pin prick of light. A humming of rails. A train was coming, pounding away through the darkness.

From the north, coming south, coming from the town whose lights made a dim glare through the rain against the black sky, came a fainter humming, to be merged with the rising note of the coming train. A tiny point of red light swayed as the handcar came, with one man desperately, frantically, working the pedals.

Phil Hardin was soft and flabby, but no runner from Marathon in ancient Greece ever made a greater, a more heroic effort. His breath came in great gasps; his heart, softened, weakened by years of fat living, pumped in a losing effort to be in time—to do one worthy thing at last—to save the woman he loved!

He heard the roar of the coming train. He screamed at the sound. The bridge was still a mile away. He rushed on. Then—a sudden, sickening crash. Too late. Something snapped in him as he heard; he slumped forward over the bars of the handcar.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

APRIL 25th - 30th

"Make Bristol a Fireless Borough" is the slogan for every resident of this borough. A loss of $500,000 annually is attributed to fires in the United States. 12,000 lives are lost each year which might have been saved had carefullness instead of carelessness been the slogan of the people. Bristol has a part to play in this great preventative campaign. If each individual recognizes his or her responsibility Bristol will soon become a "fireless town" and a great economic problem will have been solved. Do your part this week by ridding your premises of those things which might cause fires. Clear away all debris, repair chimneys, have defective wiring removed and clean-up all basements and corners where debris has accumulated.

Don't Let Your House Stay Old Fashioned - -

Have you a switch at every door—or do you grope for the lights? Have you cords trailed from lighting sockets, instead of outlets handy for your lamps, your iron and your vacuum cleaner? There are millions of half-done electrical jobs in homes now.

Asbestos Fireproof Roofing

REMEMBER THAT YOUR ROOF IS SUBJECT TO A GREAT DEAL HARDER
YEAR THAN ANY OF THE OTHER
EXPOSED PORTIONS OF YOUR HOUSE

Rain, snow, sleet, hail, ice, the blazing sun all attack it in turn. It is always subject to danger of fire-flying sparks or brands from nearby conflagrations.

Today a shingle or slate roof that is absolutely fire-proof, absolutely permanent, that costs for upkeep can be had at a price so close to the price of temporary inflammable materials that there is no longer any excuse for placing such material on a roof.

FIRE-PROOF SHINGLES

The kind of a shingle I want

I don't want to be extravagant—I want a shingle that shows my good taste and good judgment.

I want a good looking roof.

I don't want to have to worry about leaks, repairs, or replacements, and I don't ever want to have to put on another roof.

I want my roof to be fire-safe. I want it to be safe from chimney sparks and sparks from neighborhood fires.

I want my roof made by an established maker who has a reputation to live up to.

I want to buy it from a roofing man who can give me good service.

In short, I want the beauty, permanence and fire-safety of Johns-Manville Asbestos Shingles—a roof that I can be proud of.

I know that I can get such a roof from
